Draft Winds...

For the seventh consecutive year the NFL Draft will be held at Radio City Music Hall in New York City. The dates for the 2013 Draft are April 25th, 26th, and 27th. The first round of the Draft will commence on Thursday at 8:00 PM EST, with the second and third rounds on Friday, 6:30 PM EST. Rounds four through seven will conclude the Draft on Saturday at 12:00 PM EST. All teams will have ten minutes to make their selections in the first round and seven minutes for the second round. In rounds three through seven, ball clubs get five minutes to make their selections. The NFL Network and ESPN will provide television coverage.

The theme of the 2013 NFL Draft might be "Beauty is in the Eyes of the Beholder." For every film where a top player projects as a future Pro Bowler, there is another film that refutes the first observation and puts that player in the mid rounds or lower. After 300 days of junior and senior film observation, there are more holes in the top prospects than Bonnie and Clyde's getaway car. The keenest and most astute scout will get paralysis by analysis by comparing past draft profiles with present ones. Rarely does a guard get drafted in the top 10. The last one was Chris Naeole in 1997 by the New Orleans Saints. This year there are two who warrant consideration but there is a strong difference of opinions as to who is the best – Jonathan Cooper, the zone blocking and puller specialist who is quick and athletic, or Chance Warmack, a man blocking scheme road grader? Answer: draft to your team's scheme. Who is the best left offensive tackle – Luke Joeckel, Eric Fisher, or Lane Johnson? Joeckel is seasoned from the SEC, Fisher was dominant in the MAC and strong in Mobile at the Senior Bowl, Johnson may be the best three years down the road. The best corner? Dee Milliner can run, cover, and leap, but has hands like feet. Sheldon Richardson had 30 more tackles and was more productive in two less games than Sharrif Floyd. The pair both played in the SEC against the same competition and Richardson graded out higher. Floyd has short arms and one sack in the regular season. Dion Jordan and Barkevious Mingo are splendid splinters who may be upfield rushers but will struggle with strength issues. Ezekiel Ansah is a terrific athlete who did not start at BYU early in the year. In the Senior Bowl game with less structure he was unblockable. Cordarrelle Patterson is a splash play waiting to happen but may run the wrong route one play and snatch the ball in mid-flight and sprint for a touchdown the next. Tavon Austin is a special player who is 5084 and 174 pounds. Big things come in small packages. Star Lotulelei has been cleared of his heart issues but disappeared in games at Utah and his productivity was minimal for his ability. Jarvis Jones, the most productive edge 3-4 pass rusher in this draft can't run or work out as an upper echelon NFL prospect, plus he has major medical concerns. Damontre Moore, another productive college pass rusher, has questionable strength but first step explosion as a pro pass rusher. All of this mass confusion makes Manti Te'o's Facebook embarrassment pale in the "scheme" of things.

Draft Board...

The enclosed draft board on pages 2-3 would be considered the front board. The players are stacked by position and by round. Players on the board in the draft room would horizontally represent their value with another position. The position columns may overlap by rounds due to space limitations, IE: some corners with 2nd round grades are listed in the third round on the board. As players are drafted, their magnetic card is transferred to a side board where the 32 teams are listed in columns. When the draft is over, the players who are still listed on the front board would be the top free agents to be signed. Players are graded first on their ability to play their position in the NFL.

Then the players are tagged and moved from the front board to a side board and may not be drafted because of injury (medical board), positive drug test, off the field indiscretions (character board), etc. The teams will massage their boards up until two days prior to the Draft. Lastly, there is a top-150 board which is a ranking of each team's top 150 players. All 32 teams have a different top-150 board and each team's draft will come from their top-150 players.

Intriguing Prospects 2013...

By Jon Cooper

In this year's intriguing prospects we will observe some of the defensive players that the NFL is looking at as the game continues to evolve into more use of wide open spread offenses. Several factors are causing the NFL to evolve, not the least of these is injury protection. Contact is limited during the season and padded practices are few and far between. The emphasis on speed and athletic ability over physical play is being seen more and more. Teams can still practice the perimeter and passing game as well as defending it, but can spend less time on the power and inside run game. Sure you can still work on the timing and run those plays but it is not the same as what you can work on in the passing game. The emphasis is on speed, agility and quickness. As the spread becomes more a part of the NFL offense, teams will need more athletic players to defend it. If a team puts three and four wideouts on the field along with a hybrid back, defenses have to have guys out there who can play in space as well as rush the passer. While there is still a need for the physical inside run stuffer, there is an increasing need for defensive backs who can match up and linebackers who can play in space. Linebackers who can blitz and get to the quarterback are also at a premium. In past years we have seen a number of quarterbacks come into the league that are spread quarterbacks who can make plays with their feet along with throwing the ball. The read option/zone read play was once a "wildcat" only concept, but now there are several NFL quarterbacks who run that play on a regular basis. Having more than one quality quarterback in this situation is important as the injury factor on a running quarterback is increased. The Redskins saw this and drafted two outstanding players in Robert Griffin III and Kirk Cousins. When RGIII went down, Cousins stepped up in a key game, justifying the Redskins' decision. This year does not appear to be the year of the quarterback as the first round may see only one or two drafted. Some teams do not project them as first round picks. Geno Smith of West Virginia is the top guy and plays in the spread, showing outstanding passing mechanics and very good accuracy in the short and intermediate game. He is a good athlete who makes plays passing the ball but has the tools to develop into a positive scrambler. Needs some refinement for the pro game but should make an immediate impact. NFL teams are constantly looking to fill their 53-man roster with not only starters but quality situational players, special teams' players, and quality depth. The good news is many of those hybrid defensive players that can run, also make good special teams' players. The linebacker position has its usual share of "tweener" types, potential conversions and one dimensional role players but does not have a lot of elite talent. There will however be some guys taken in the mid-rounds and lower who will be productive players. Mante Te'o of Notre Dame is the first guy most people are talking about when you mention linebackers. He has been analyzed in multiple ways including his 40-time at the Combine. Our focus is on how he plays and his ability. His Combine workout was outstanding, showing no wasted movement and good agility and quickness. He also was an extremely productive player at Notre Dame in spite of the Alabama game. His whole body of work gives you a talented football player who projects inside in a modern NFL defense. The question is, does what we saw against Alabama indicate that he will not project well to the next level? Time will tell, but he should be drafted high and has the tools to be a productive full time starter in the NFL. Jarvis Jones of Georgia played all over the defense and has outstanding pass rush skills. He has good instincts and was extremely productive. Can play most linebacker positions in either a 3-4 or 4-3 and provides an explosive blitz as well as outstanding chase ability. Prior to recent workouts, he was projected as a number one pick. However, a slow 40-time and pass cover concerns along with the injury factor create some doubt on his draft status. His athletic ability and production are too good to ignore. Khaseem Greene of Rutgers fits the mold of the cover linebacker needed to play match up coverage and make plays in space. He was a playmaker that plays with a high motor and is at his best in pursuit. He has quick reactions with sudden change of direction but will be out of control at times with his high motor and has some inconsistency in reactions. That said he was very productive and always around the ball. A little undersized but has the tools you look for to play in space. Should be an outstanding special team's player. Sean Porter of Texas A&M is a little undersized, but has the athletic ability you need and shows excellent cover skills in both man and zone coverage. Has good blitzing ability, range, and a burst off the edge. He is quick to read and react and will take solid drops in coverage. Will get out of position occasionally and is not the most physical taking on blocks. In the right scheme he can be a productive full time player. Sio Moore of Connecticut was the star of the post season at linebacker playing in the East/West and then an add-on at the Senior Bowl. He made the most of his opportunity displaying outstanding athletic ability, hustle and physical play. Sudden change of direction and instincts were on display in both games and practices. Has a high motor with good range in pursuit. Physical taking on blocks as he played with leverage. Moore played through blocks consistently both versus the run and in blitz situations. Solid in coverage and has the ability to play in space. Projects outside in a 4-3 but is worth a look as a 3-4 inside linebacker. He is shorter than ideal but has the tools to play in most systems. Chase Thomas of Stanford played outside linebacker in Stanford's 3-4 but was used with his hand on the ground at times. Played havoc with the zone read and option and was a solid pass rusher. Made a lot of plays in the opponent's backfield. His stock may have dropped some in the post season as he struggled with reads and coverage. He did not run well at the Combine. However, he is a physical smart player who should produce in the right scheme. Jamie Collins of Southern Mississippi is an outside linebacker prospect with solid cover skills in both man and zone. He is an example of a hybrid safety/linebacker type that will find a role in coverage packages against spread offenses. Not the most physical take on guy as he tends to play upright. He has good size for the position but is more the athlete than "thumper". Zaviar Gooden of Missouri is a little undersized and struggles versus blockers. He is an outstanding athlete who chases extremely well and shows good man-to-man skill versus backs and tight ends. Has fringe instincts and may be limited to nickel linebacker. The need for players like Gooden is increasing so he should find a role. Has good special teams potential. DaVonte Holloman of South Carolina played outside linebacker or "spur" in a college 3-3 stack defense so he will fit as the hybrid type safety/outside linebacker in the NFL nickel package. He has the size and athletic ability you look for as well as outstanding quickness. He plays with good leverage and gets through blocks. Solid in man and zone as he can match up to backs including the "hybrid" type backs. Will have to adapt to NFL style defenses but his tools should give him a situational role along with great special teams potential. Kevin Minter of LSU is an instinctive inside linebacker prospect who has the quickness and agility to make plays outside the box. Combine this with his stack and shed ability and you have a top prospect. Quick and physical defeating blocks and has the speed to chase. Good cover skills with solid drops. Good blitz and downhill run stuffer. Projects well as a Mike in a 4-3 but could project inside in the 3-4. Shorter than ideal but has the tools you need to play in all packages. I will not be surprised if he is in the first round. Trevardo Williams of Connecticut was undersized for his defensive end position at Connecticut but had such quick first step and burst off the edge that he made up for his lack of bulk. Turned quickness into power and beat blockers with initial quickness and explosiveness. Does a great job getting around the corner and reacting to the quarterback. Ran well at the Combine confirming his playing speed. Worked briefly at linebacker Senior Bowl week. Struggled in coverage. When playing backed off, but played well over a tight end. He showed enough in man cover drills to believe he can run with a tight end. He projects as a 3-4 Sam and can give you the pass rusher at linebacker you need in that defense. Vince Williams of Florida State does not fit the mold of the cover linebacker and would appear to be a bit of a dinosaur in today's football. That said he is a solid run stuffer who can have a role in some packages. He has good instincts and plays from tackle to tackle. Most likely a two down player who will not be a priority pick. He will most likely be a later round pick but if he can play on special teams he will have a role. Another player that will be a conversion to 3-4 outside linebacker is Barkevious Mingo of LSU. Outstanding pass rusher though undersized. Quick and athletic with the speed to chase and play off the edge. In some schemes he could play with his hand on the ground and create havoc in the backfield. He has first round talent as a pass rusher. Ty Powell of Harding is a Division II defensive end/outside linebacker prospect who is raw as a linebacker but could find a home there in a 3-4. He struggled with instincts at the Senior Bowl but showed enough in his opportunities to believe he projects there. He may be drafted late but is a worthwhile project as he has a burst as a pass rusher and showed enough cover aptitude to work with. This year we took a look at the safety position along with some corners to see about hybrids and safeties with the cover skills essential to play against spread offenses. These guys still have to play the run, but being able to play match up coverage is at a premium. BW Webb of William and Mary is a corner who played some match up on slot receivers, so he has experience that could make him a nickel or cover safety prospect. He is not physical as a tackler but is solid in coverage with fluid transitions and sudden change of direction. He is also a returner so could make a team as a situational player. Matt Elam of Florida is a shorter than ideal safety, but he has the cover skills needed. He also can make plays as a blitz. He is also a physical run player with solid tackling ability. He can play all types of coverage and has the speed to match up and should be one of the first safeties taken. Kenny Vaccaro of Texas is noted for his physical run support but also has solid cover skills. Has ideal size for safety and outstanding range in coverage and pursuit. He will also go early and should be a lock for the first round. David Amerson of North Carolina State is a big corner who could project to safety. He is physical in run support with good toughness and tackling ability. He has very good ball skills and enough speed to match up inside and play over the top. I like him as a safety but he will have to show he can adapt to safety responsibilities. He will have to show he can run with the wideouts to play corner in the NFL. Either way he should go in the first two rounds. Leon McFadden of San Diego State is a nickel back/third or fourth corner prospect who shows good toughness and the ability to match up with wide receivers and slots. He is tough in man coverage although shorter than ideal. Showed well at the Senior Bowl practices in all phases. TJ McDonald of USC is an athletic safety who is very fluid in transition. Shows cover skills for a safety and outstanding range. Instinctive and always around the ball in run support. Good angles in pursuit and good range in coverage. Shows some man skills for a safety and good awareness of routes in a zone. He is a solid safety prospect. Duke Williams of Nevada is an active aggressive safety that you can't help notice when watching Nevada play. Tough in run support and he transitions well in zone coverage. Made a great impression in run support but will have to show he can play in an NFL defense. Shorter than ideal but has good tools. Bacarri Rambo of Georgia is a two-way safety who shows well in run support and pass coverage. Quick read and react with sudden transition. Makes a lot of tackles with big hits. Will miss one occasionally but made a lot of plays. Shows good ball skills and also makes a lot of plays in coverage. Demonstrated some man-to-man skills at the Senior Bowl and shows the tools you look for to play safety in today's NFL. Had an off-field issue and did not run extremely well at his pro day so it will be interesting to see where he is selected.

Small college free agent spotlight:

Borsellino, John      Illinois Benedictine      5063 185 4.53

All-purpose back in the Danny Woodhead mold who dominated at the Division III level. Two-time All-American who put up solid numbers as a returner, receiver and runner. For his career he had 3266 yards rushing, 38 touchdowns, 1107 receiving yards, 8 touchdowns, 528 yards on punt returns, and 989 yards on kickoff returns with 2 touchdowns. Tough runner for his size. He slips tackles and demonstrates outstanding agility and balance in traffic. Bench pressed 29 reps. Natural hands, leaping ability, and body control gives him a better catch radius than his size. Height is the major limiting factor but he may have a role on the right team.

OURLADS' Annual LADDIE AWARDS

The LADDIES have become a regular part of our Draft coverage. We enjoy them. It's fun. Based on our discussion with subscribers, most enjoy them as well. These awards are the subjective result of a poll among 'our lads' and are for your enjoyment. And the 2013 Awards go to:
